

Stakeholder Monitoring

Staying informed about the ever-changing political environment and regulatory developments is pivotal for any organisation that wants to control the environment in which it operates. With no less than six governments and seven parliaments, keeping a finger on the pulse of what cooks and boils in the kitchens of Belgian politics is quite a challenge.

Our Public Affairs team closely and continuously monitors the agendas of the councils of ministers and parliaments, at federal and regional levels. We also keep an eye on positions and declarations from political parties, industry federations, consumer organisations and pressure groups.

All these findings are summarised in political monitoring reports tailored to our clients' needs and expectations.

One of our most requested reports is the Weekly Political Preview that provides information on dossiers and topics lined up for debate and decision in parliament (commission meetings and plenary sessions) and the council of ministers. This information allows you to anticipate political decision making and even influence the process. The exact scope of themes and topics covered in the report are agreed upon with you. Our job is to filter the mass of information and provide the items that are potentially relevant to you.

Review

Another popular report is the Weekly Political Review that offers insights into political debates that have taken place in parliamentary assemblies and the arguments that have led to a certain position or decision being taken. The report covers both the discussions in parliamentary commissions and plenary sessions. If required, a member of our Public Affairs team can be present at a parliamentary debate in commissions or plenary sessions in order to provide first-hand information and facilitate faster action.
